

This is Catori, she's 6-years-old and she isn't afraid of anything. Not big dogs, not thunder & lightning, not heights, not the dark; not even falling down because she knew that getting scrapes and bruises only made her stronger. Catori is fearless, brave, and has a huge imagination.

She is a true adventurer. Sometimes she's a pirate at sea, going on scavenger hunts in the rain for treasure. Some days she's an archaeologist in the sandbox, finding new things like ancient pottery and digging up old dinosaur bones. In some ways she's a spy, ducking and dodging motion sensors in the toy store's pink isle in order to get to the action toys.

Every summer Catori stays with her grandma, where she has the best adventures. Sometimes Catori would travel through the jungle, collecting wild berries and snakes from her grandma's garden.

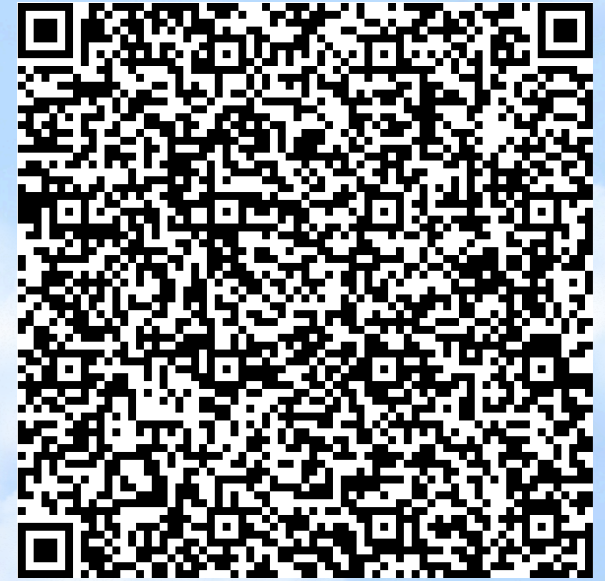

Some days she was an artist, drawing all of the beautiful butterflies and ladybugs that would visit her grandma's butterfly bush. In some ways she was a daredevil, jumping from pillow to pillow to avoid the hot lava on the floor.

Catori's Grandma would always make-believe with her too; She set up different clues and games around the house. On warm nights she would take Catori outside and pretend they were collecting specs of gold, which were really fireflies, or as her grandma called, lightning bugs. Sometimes if Catori was really good, her grandma would take her into the kitchen and give her a glass of chocolate milk before bed. No matter what adventure they had, they always ended up being in the kitchen.

TESTIMONIAL

“I was not expecting this children's book to hit so hard emotionally, be chock full of interesting historical facts, or to take me on such a journey. But it did all those things!

Definitely recommend,
even if you don't have kids.”
